The Four Levels of Monetary Vision and Generation

Blake maps this escalating socioeconomic and spiritual entropy against his definitive epistemological concept: the Four Levels of Vision. This paradigm directly traces the evolution of British monetary architectures, moving from calculation, through generative (but unstable) tension, to the ultimate requirement for an overarching qualitative human integration (as explored further under Illuminated Nonduality). Northrop Frye's foundational elucidation in Fearful Symmetry (1947) establishes that Blake's Fourfold Vision represents not merely a poetic conceit but a complete philosophical telos: imaginative creativity operating as a living, breathing power that restores the fractured human form [@frye1947fearful].

Single Vision (Ulro): Monometallism and Fiat

The lowest perceptual state in Blake's cosmology is Ulro (Single Vision). Dominated strictly by empirical measurement and atomistic isolation, it is a realm of spiritual death—what Blake describes as "Newtons sleep," the stupor of pure quantification. As Susanne Sklar notes, "In Ulro, that which can't be expressed